

Clinical Scale Elevations

Scale 1 (Hs)

75-84

Elevations on this Scale taking race, gender, age, education, marital and employment status into consideration for this group's data, indicate these clinical features could be present in this person's behavior and history:

Their bodily sensations frighten them. They often misinterpret what their bodily sensations signify. The responses others make to their personal health concerns shape their self-centered behavior. They want others to solve the problems they encounter in life. The more help they receive, the more helpless they become. They let others know when they are under stress what they want by complaining and lamenting their fate. They cannot be satisfied no matter what other people do for them. They thwart all attempts at assistance. Nothing changes. Helpers end-up feeling miserable.