

Clinical Scale Elevations

Scale(s) Es
Ego Strength Scale

T-score # 39

Elevations on the present Scale(s), taking race, gender, age, education, marital and employment status into consideration for the corresponding group's data, indicate any or all of these clinical features could be present in this person's behavior and history:

They rely heavily upon other for support and approval. Criticism is particularly devastating for them. They need someone to tell them what to do and how to do it. They excel at routine work. They do not get bored easily. They do not get much out of therapy. Their need for direction is overarching. Therapists tend to prefer them when they come with good insurance or from wealth. They find it nearly impossible to consider themselves as independent individuals.
