

CRITICAL

Synonyms: judgmental, fault-finding, nit-picky

He tends to have a rather negative attitude and can be impatient with people who don't catch on quickly enough to what he is trying to get across. As a consequence, his sharp manner may offend someone who is just trying to get an answer to a question.

You seem to see things in terms of black/white, good/bad, and can be quite judgmental when others don't agree.

He has a lively sense of humor and an ironic view of life that can turn to critical sarcasm if he isn't careful.

This is an intellectually oriented person who sees things in terms of black/white, good/bad, right/wrong. He doesn't have much tolerance for anything in-between.

She has very high standards and expects them to be met. Because she takes an unemotional approach, she may seem critical or judgmental.

This individual has little tolerance for redundancy and although she will allow herself or someone else to make a mistake once, the same mistake made twice will incur her wrath.

Constantly reminding yourself of their past transgressions can be a source of friction between yourself and others. It may help to consider that most people do change and some might even be worthy of your reappraisal.

A propensity for separating your spiteful aggressions from your loving side offers your ego a strategic haven for protection.

Her judgments are sharp and uncompromising, often subjective.

Such an individual cannot integrate his own male and female aspects of personality. He cannot find his inner masculinity and does not know how to relate to others from his "power base". So he develops an excessive habit of emphatic self assertion where practical, material things are concerned. He snips at those he cannot otherwise control or handle. Watch for a sharp tongue.

He will completely yield where gentle, ideal things are concerned. Where deep, personal instincts and needs exist, there is likely to be aggressive, impulsive, unintended attack.

There is an indication of a critical attitude towards others that is not expressed, along with a capacity for sarcasm that is. As a child he probably got lots of sarcasm from parents and others. That's where we learn the skill of sarcasm. The sensitivity supports that idea. And all that implies a tendency to think I must have done something wrong and it's just a matter of time before someone jumps on me.

The writer is testy and says sharp or hurting things at times. Especially when you are getting close as in a real good friendship. It's hard to get close to this person.

If there are flaws to be found, he will find them.

His sharp judgments are probably not intended to hurt, but to teach. However, the wounds inflicted with his criticisms can be so deep that the good intentions are lost in the ruins of the recipient's ego.