

IMPATIENT

Synonyms: eager, enthusiastic, restless, hasty, rash

Having to slow down your mental processes to accommodate those who are not as quick as you can make you feel impatient, and you tend to show it.

His impatience to get past the small talk can make the other party feel rushed and anxious.

She is at her best when handling new problems and is less happy dealing with long, drawn out situations that involve a lot of routine detail and time to develop.

When it comes to talking about your deep, inner feelings, you abruptly change the subject. You just don't have the patience for that sort of thing. You want to get on with life, not talk about it.

She is impatient if she has to wait for others to keep up to her quick pace, as she wants things to be accomplished immediately.

He is willing to investigate beyond superficial information to satisfy his own need for more specific data. His mind digs hard for all the facts.

He becomes impatient, irritated and frustrated when his standards are not being met.

Waiting makes her nervous. She'll fidget from one foot to the other if forced to stand in line for any time at all.

His impatient attitude can often make him seem irritable and cross, even though he doesn't mean to be that way.

Acting rashly because she doesn't want to take the time to do things properly the first time, she often has to suffer the consequences.

Your impatience comes through in quick annoyance. Do you realize that those around you have to "walk on eggs?"

