

Clinical Scale Elevations

Scale 1 (Hs)

Tscore 75-84

Elevations on this Scale taking race, gender, age, education, marital and employment status into consideration for this group's data, indicate these clinical features could be present in this person's behavior and history:

They are frightened by their bodily sensations. They often misinterpret what their bodily sensations signify. Their self-centered behavior is shaped by the responses others make to their personal health concerns. They want the problems they encounter in life to be solved by other people. The more help they receive, the more helpless they become. They let others know when they are under stress what they want by complaining and lamenting their fate. They cannot be satisfied no matter what other people do for them. All attempts at assistance are thwarted. Nothing changes. Helpers end-up feeling miserable.
